Historic Settlement

Christopher McWay homesteaded this canyon in 1887. The old barn standing 200 yards upstream dates from 1894, and is made of local hand-split redwood.

In 1922 Lathrop and Helen Hooper Brown purchased Saddle Rock Ranch, now part of the Julia Pfeiffer Burns State Park. They built a simple redwood cabin on the waterfall overlook, then in 1940 constructed a larger home called "Waterfall House," now demolished. The Pelton Wheel supplied the ranch's power needs for the barn, three residences, a blacksmith shop, and a mining car tram that ran between the main house and Highway One.

Pacific Gas and Electric brought in power in 1952, but the Pelton Wheel remained as standby power for winter outages.

This photograph was taken by the crew on board the Columbia during its last mission, on a cloudless day. The picture is of Europe and Africa when the sun is setting. Half of the picture is in night. The bright dots you see are the cities lights. The top part of Africa is the Sahara Desert. Note that the lights are already on in Holland, Paris, and Barcelona, and that it's still daylight in Dublin, London, Lisbon, and Madrid. The sun is still shining on the Strait of Gibraltar. The Mediterranean Sea is already in darkness. In the middle of the Atlantic Ocean you can see the Azores Islands; below them to the right are the Madeira Islands; a bit below are the Canary Islands; and further South, close to the farthest western point of Africa, are the Cape Verde islands. Note that the Sahara is huge and can be seen clearly both during daytime and night time. To the left, on top, is Greenland, totally frozen.
