Flower bed edging from old bricks around back yard

Hello All,

Wow what a day yesterday. It was lot of fun and work. I never imagined getting as much done as we did. The day lilies were dug up and potted for replanting later. The brick planter was removed with the mortar chipped off the bricks then reinstalled in the back yard for a border along the beds along the fence in the old play yard area. The extra bricks were stacked in the back yard. The old mortar and broken bricks were hauled off into the trailer. The footing for the new rock planter was all dug. The irrigation valves were installed and connected to the pvc pipes stubbed under the sidewalk for the 2 lawn zones. The rock garden zone was stubbed out, as was the planter zone. The irrigation controller was installed in the garage and wires stubbed out the wall by the sprinkler valves. The backyard lawn was mowed and the whole work area cleaned up. The concrete and mortar mix was unloaded and stacked in the garage. I think that's everything. Let me know if I missed something. I hope we didn't overwork Dad too much. We kept him running around for directions and tools... He said he was looking forward to his easy chair as I was leaving. So was I. I was hoping Eli would drive home but he fell asleep riding shotgun. Mom and Dad provided us a wonderful and much appreciated lunch. Lunch never tasted so good. Thanks for all that were able to show up and help out.

Love, Dan

Memorial to the Jallianwala Massacre in 1930

HISTORY.COM April 13, 1919 In Amritsar, India's holy city of the Sikh religion, British and Gurkha troops massacre at least 379 unarmed demonstrators meeting at the Jallianwala Bagh, a city park. Most of those killed were Indian nationalists meeting to protest the British government's forced conscription of Indian soldiers and the heavy war tax imposed against the Indian people.

A few days earlier, in reaction to a recent escalation in protests, Amritsar was placed under martial law and handed over to British Brigadier General Reginald Dyer, who banned all meetings and gatherings in the city. On April 13, the day of the Sikh Baisakhi festival, tens of thousands of people came to Amritsar from surrounding villages to attend the city's traditional fairs. Thousands of these people, many unaware of Dyer's recent ban on public assemblies, convened at Jallianwala Bagh, where a nationalist demonstration was being held. Dyer's troops surrounded the park and without warning opened fire on the crowd, killing several hundred and wounding more than a thousand. Dyer, who in a subsequent investigation admitted to ordering the attack for its "moral effect" on the people of the region, had his troops continue the murderous barrage until all their artillery was exhausted. British authorities later removed him from his post.

The massacre stirred nationalist feelings across India and had a profound effect on one of the movement's leaders, Mohandas Gandhi. During World War I, Gandhi had actively supported the British in the hope of winning partial autonomy for India, but after the Amritsar Massacre he became convinced that India should accept nothing less than full independence. To achieve this end, Gandhi began organizing his first campaign of mass civil disobedience against Britain's oppressive rule.
